Publishers' Preface.

IN presenting to the subscriber and the public "An Art Souvenir of the Republican National Convention of 1900," the publishers feel that they have quite fulfilled the promise of their prospectus. To have collected about 700 photographs of those who, coming from ocean to ocean and from the lakes to the Gulf, assembled in our loyal city in June last to name a ticket in the present campaign, and to have executed therefrom 700 half-tone copper plates, have involved an expense and labor, not to say persistence, that has been truly great, and which, we trust, will be appreciated, especially by those whose portraits appear in these pages, and incidentally by the great political party they represent and the public at large. Reference to our index will show that very few omissions have been made of those prominent in the Twelfth Republican National Convention, or those having the management of the campaign of 1900. Certainly there has been no omission chargeable to the publishers. In no case has there not been an urgent solicitation, and often a re-solicitation, for a photograph.

In offering to the Republican party and the general public this work, we anticipate an appreciable recognition of its merit and value, and have no doubt it will find a place in thousands of political libraries. In the library of the journalist and publisher it must certainly be found invaluable as a work of reference.

GATCHEL & MANNING.
